HONGKONG, FEBRUARY STH. 1890.

For once in a way Reuter has furnished us with an interesting and important piece of information. It is true that it was issued with a most misleading heading, to wit, "The Russian Railway Construction," whereas the message has no reference whitever to the great Siberian railway planned by General not impaired by this ridiculous error. What the message means is no doubt briefly this The report of the projected grand trunk railway from near Peking to Hankow has reached Russis with sundry embellishments and additions, including probably the suggested future railway from Shan Hai Kwan the military post at the shore end of the Great Wall on the Gulf of Pechili, to Moukden, the capital of Manchuria. This line was however, only obscurely suggested, was indeed hardly in nubibus, yet the idea has reached the captives were still in the hands of the Russia, taken concrete form as a projected pirates. railway from Peking to Kirin, the chief city name, and either inspired alarm and distrust or given a pretext for feigning apprehension, and Shanghai. since the Russian Press have demanded that measures should be taken to provide for the more effective protection of the Russian frontier in Eastern Siberia. The Russian Press, as is well known, is subjected to a rigorous censorship, and had the demand been regarded by the Russian Government as have been promptly suppressed. The logical conclusion is therefore that the authorities at St. Petersburg considered the outcry as well founded, and further and most convincing proof of this is afforded by the announcement, rapidly following the first telegram, that the formation of two new rifle regiments has been or. dered for Eastern Siberia. Clearly, whatever the Russian Empire by the reported determination of China to create a system of strategic railways, the Government of the
